

New job website for young journalists

Attention young journalists: Forget JournalismJobs.com.

A new website, created by a New Jersey professor, was recently ranked as the number one journalism job resource for soon-to-be college graduates.

Mark Grabowski, a former newspaper reporter who now teaches journalism at Monmouth University, launched CubReporters.com in April 2007.

The site contains internship listings, jobs leads, fellowship opportunities, career advice and other features specifically geared towards young and early-career journalists.

"A can't miss guide to helping novices break into print journalism," said Gregg McLachlan, Sincoe (Ontario) Reformer associate managing editor and webmaster of the journalism website NewsCollege.

The Society for News Design went one step further, ranking

CubReporters.org as the top website for journalism rookies.

In second place was the long-venerated JournalismJobs.com.

Unique content

"What separates CubReporters.org from other journalism websites is that it offers original content for young journalists that can't be found anywhere else," said the 30-year-old Grabowski, who holds a law degree from Georgetown and who previously wrote for the Arizona Republic and Providence Journal.

"For example, this site features a lengthy list of major newspapers and magazines that routinely hire entry-level reporters, and it has a section that lists dozens of fellowships specifically geared towards young journalists."

The site already gets more than 10,000 page views a week. It has been mentioned in Mediabistro.com, Online Journalism Review, Quill and others.